Lactating dairy cows in total mixed rations (TMR) were studied to evaluate the influence of different feeding systems (receiving in three different bunk arrangements: stall feeding, tie-stall feeding or nest feeding) on milk yield and milk composition, as well as on productivity. TMR consisted of a total mixed ration based on corn silage, cereal grains and concentrates, and were fed for a period of four weeks (32 cows per arrangement). In general, cow diet, feeding system, and time were assumed as random factors, whereas cow or sample was considered as a repeated measure. Consumption of dry matter was not influenced by feeding system. In stall-fed cows an average of 0.13% less milk was lost in milking, whereas no such difference was observed in tie-stall or nest-fed cows. The estimated total milk losses were influenced by feeding system, with stall-fed cows (4.88) losing more milk than nest-fed cows (4.32). Milk composition was mostly unaffected by feeding system.
