Three-dimensional elasticity imaging using phase-coded axial compression and compressional strain waves. The elasticity of soft tissue appears to be an important physical parameter for various medical applications. The objective of this study is to develop a new method of elasticity imaging using phase-coded axial compression and compressional strain waves for measuring the three-dimensional (3-D) viscoelastic moduli of soft tissues. An elasticity imaging system is constructed, which is composed of an intrafascicular vibrator, a transmitter, and a receiver. A phantom is used to acquire the 3-D viscoelastic data using a multielement array transducer. A pulsed waveform is used for the axial compression and strain wave propagation. The acoustic propagation in soft tissues is simulated numerically. The method is validated using four different phantoms. A phase-coded axial compression at 0.64 MHz is used for acquiring 3-D viscoelastic data. This phantom yields a relative error in estimating the 3-D elasticity modulus of less than 6.4%, 2.7%, and 6.8% for viscoelasticity values of 1, 2, and 3.5 MPa, respectively. This method is successfully applied in estimating the 3-D viscoelastic moduli of porcine liver, subcutaneous fat, and muscles, with absolute errors of 3.7 ± 1.3 ,
