Online commerce has rapidly evolved from an offering of pictures and descriptions to include products, services, and software. This evolution is mainly enabled by the expansion and improvement of information retrieval technology and Internet delivery techniques. In recent years, the Internet has evolved into a service that is accessible to and useful to an exponentially greater number of individuals and organizations. It is an important part of the modern infrastructure supporting the economy, culture, and society of the United States and other nations. The Internet is available to a significant number of end users in the United States on an affordable subscription basis. As the number of individuals and organizations using the Internet continues to grow, demand for online commerce is expected to accelerate. According to available industry data, total worldwide annual online sales of goods, services, and software amounted to $660 billion as of September 2001, representing a compound annual growth rate of approximately 26 percent.[1] In absolute terms, the impact of online activity is expected to increase in the coming years and become a significant and influential source of Internet activity. In the United States alone, it has been estimated that annual online sales could reach $201.3 billion in 2004, an increase of 58 percent from 2001.[1] Online commerce has become the dominant form of sales activity on the Internet. Online commerce has rapidly evolved from an offering of pictures and descriptions to include products, services, and software. This evolution is mainly enabled by the expansion and improvement of information retrieval technology and Internet delivery techniques. Internet retail sales for software and computer hardware are expected to exceed those of traditional retail sales for most retail goods in 2004. Many analysts are predicting that online sales of software and computer hardware will overtake traditional retail sales by 2008, with units sold forecast to exceed $114 billion for those products. On a per unit basis, this represents a 128 percent increase.1 Thus, many analysts predict that online spending will be significant not only in the United States, but also globally. A 1999 study by the McKinsey Global Institute indicated that, from a customer base of over 5 billion individuals, Internet commerce is the largest economic sector in the world in terms of money spent and volume of goods and services consumed. Currently, online purchasing represents 12 percent of total retail revenue in North America, or $1 trillion annually, and is expected to increase to $1.4 trillion by 2004.1 In the United States in 2001, for example, online purchases, including the use of

North Korea has opened up a nursery programme for North Korean-Japanese children on its soil to ease the family reunions, it was reported Thursday. The scheme would see young North Koreans who have Japanese citizenship or permanent resident status send their children to Japanese schools and preschools to learn the language and customs of Japan, according to the Korea JoongAng Daily. The report said Pyongyang did not expect the educational programmes would lead to any official ties between the countries but rather a social and cultural exchange. The project was first proposed last year during an annual meeting in Beijing between North Korean leader Kim Jong Un and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe. It is believed to have been approved as a result of a meeting in April between state and municipal officials in the Koreas, it said. The report quoted a source in North Korea as saying that "joint projects" were to be enacted by 2020 as part of the wide-ranging projects being carried out under the North Korean leader's leadership. The move comes amid heightened tensions on the Korean peninsula following a series of recent missile tests by Pyongyang, including a highly sophisticated submarine-launched ballistic missile which gave off a new light show seen from the US mainland. North Korea's missile tests have been accompanied by a series of stern warnings from Pyongyang against a US strike on the country, which it sees as the main culprit behind tensions in the region. The North's state media has been carrying alarmist rhetoric against the US and its ally South Korea, and Japanese residents have been warned to stock up on food and water as a new crisis is on the horizon. Pyongyang's military has stated that the country is close to a war with the US and has said it is only a matter of time before a strike on North Korea takes place, according to Japanese newspaper Asahi Shimbun. The report said the project would take six months to complete and cost around $300,000. Pyongyang and Tokyo have agreed to promote bilateral economic cooperation, but Japan has refused to discuss North Korea's nuclear programme, which it sees as a threat to its national security.ROSE - Call For New Controllers & Engineers!
