Justin Bieber (Stanley Clarke, Eric Clapton) - Maroon 5, 2013 - Lyrics - MetroLyrics.Do We Need an All-Eve Character Pack? When I first started playing EVE, I used to love the idea that it was possible to completely lose myself in an interstellar galaxy filled with places, races, and various unique factions. I loved how, while not even having a "main" ship, I could obtain a capsule with the promise of becoming whatever I desired. The game presented such a diverse and engaging experience, with a possibility for expanding beyond my own character to become something much larger. It makes sense that I came to love it. It made me want to play more. It introduced me to a world that was more diverse than my own. It gave me a great sense of agency and control over what would happen. I found my own identity within the game and could write my own history in Eve, without any limitations. However, something has changed in the game. It is no longer the vast global environment that attracted me and that eventually led to the highest level of my EVE play, but has instead become an excuse to create cosmetic items and an excuse to increase CCP's pocket. More and more, I find that Eve has become about pre-nerf-trading, about ganking, about salvage loss, about weekend PvP. Each time someone waves around some black shit, I find myself cringing at the disparity between our actual state, and what I want the game to be. I want a game about exploration. I want a game that will expose me to more diversity and more challenges that I am not encountering in my real life. I want a game where the players are not blamed for being outplayed, or losing an extractor, or abusing a timer, or trying something they shouldn't have. I want a game where I can play for the sake of a fun I don't see anywhere else in real life. I don't want to see people suffering, or die. I want to see them have fun. So, with that in mind, what is the point
