DC-unlocker client software V1.00.0975....Q: Knockout ViewModels I'm writing a single page web app and using knockout as my View Model. I would like to make multiple viewmodels associated with the same page, but I haven't come up with a clean way to do this. This is my current set up: My Page Model: function Page() { var self = this; self.mainPageContent = ko.observable(); self.contentPageContent = ko.observable(); } ViewModelOne: function ViewModelOne() { var self = this; self.viewOnePageContent = ko.observable(self.mainPageContent()); self.viewOneContentPageContent = ko.observable(self.contentPageContent()); } ViewModelTwo: function ViewModelTwo() { var self = this; self.viewTwoPageContent = ko.observable(self.mainPageContent()); self.viewTwoContentPageContent = ko.observable(self.contentPageContent()); } So essentially I have a main content page and I would like a view model to be associated with it, and then another view model for a content page, for which a user can navigate to without leaving the main content. Is there any clean way to do this? A: You can have a parent ViewModel for each page. Also, you can group multiple pages in a view model and have a property that is the main content page and another that is the content pages for the group (see sample in viewmodel/group.js): function Page() { var self = this; self.contentPages = ko.observableArray([]); self 6d1f23a050
