As you said it's a cracked setup, and I can't tell you which cracker it is, as I don't know which installer your download is using. But I can suggest you try the methods in this post: How to fix installation problems on Windows 7 64 bit You can also try out the methods described in this Superuser post. Elective and emergency fundoplication in infancy. Forty-nine infants underwent elective fundoplication or emergency fundoplication. There was a 1-year survival rate of 77%. Fifty-one percent of the children were neurologically abnormal at follow-up. Twenty-eight infants underwent surgery by 4 months of age, and 21 at 6 months. Thirty-four infants had symptomatic gastroesophageal reflux, 11 had symptoms secondary to congenital heart disease, and 14 had a congenital esophageal anomaly. The medical risks were more than the operative risks, and only in the latter group did the operation significantly affect outcome. The authors recommend early elective fundoplication in infants with symptomatic gastroesophageal reflux who present by 4 months of age.Q: What is the best way to check if the user is logged in with node.js and express? What is the best way to check if the user is logged in with node.js and express? Also, I am wondering if the user is not logged in yet how do I redirect the user to the login page? I am thinking about sending them to the login page if they don't have any cookies. A: That depends on how you want to do the login. If you want to do it all in javascript, you can easily check if there are any session cookies (and compare this to the session ID in your database) and then redirect them accordingly. If you want to do it server side then you can use Express.js' sessions to store the user's session for you and always save the session ID to the database. Now you don't need to check at all and you only need to change the session ID when the user logs in or out. Also if you want to really make sure the user is logged in, you can add another column to your database that stores a timestamp when the user accessed the page. If this is set to the current time, the user is logged in. A: If you're using express middleware, there
