Adobe's latest Photoshop CS6 for Mac is faster and easier to use. Using the Airbrush tool is no longer reserved only for color gradients. If you need to draw any kind of freehand mask or gradient, you can use the tool. As expected of an Adobe program, and with a price tag of $1200.00, the new Photoshop is packed with lots of tools. The Batch panel is optimized to make your life easier as you work. There are also lots of changes to existing tools and functions. Lightroom 5 still includes many of Lightroom 4's features, but some are underwhelming. For example, there is only one quick crop tool (no paths) and work is done on selections, no longer on layers. For instance, there are no Refine Edge or Refine Mask tools. Curves are still present and a new Curves Transform tool allows for a quick and easy change to the most important parameters of curves. Of course, you can still color-correct and correct away red eyes as usual. In the Photo Merge tool, there are now three ways of working, as there are in Lightroom 4, but the "Preview" option is the default and that is certainly not the best way to work. If you're one of the lightroom 4 users who didn't know about the image merge, here's a quick video tutorial to make you aware. You'll need to have an unmerged image with a canvas layer selected to use the tool. This is the "preview" option. Adobe Photoshop CS6 for Mac is available for download on the Adobe website for $1200, if you want a trial version, you'll have to cough up $350. Photoshop CS6 is faster and easier to use.
