Simplifying Airbrush tools was a high priority. A few refinements, like the ability to draw more precisely with new brush presets, gradients and inks, help make this tool easier to use. A new multiple mask option lets you apply a mask to multiple layers simultaneously, making it easier to mask adjustments before blending them. A new Scribble tool lets you edit shapes with more fine-tuning options. Another of the key new features of Photoshop 2023 is the new Content Aware Fill tool. Instead of having to draw a mask around an object to automatically add the background, you now fill in the space with what looks like splashing paint. Since one third of my photos are 5D Mark III with no lens distortion, I had no need for Lightroom. Of course I haven't used the new camera 5D Mark IV yet. So I tried to use Lightroom to speed up the work. As I mentioned above, I had to use the developer mode. The results are excellent. I just hope it retains that speed when I start using the Mark IV. Big files, some Sony camera, Canon 50D. Great stuff. But the only thing is that the transparency, the printing and output quality is very poor without removing the top layer. Hence, I had to use the python console as it is impossible to display the images with the non-print quality settings. In the introduction, I had 5 D3 view in the Bottom, 4 Bridge tabs and 5] file cache tab. Do not ask me why there is only 2 Bridge tabs and with the video/audio feature I believe there had been more than 3 Overlay tabs. The screenshot at the beginning was a single non-removed layer. It is a funny that Lightroom creates preview images as JPEGs. Well, I hope this is the process when adding transparency. And the job is no longer helping me! I think I had to change some settings in the preference, but it's sure not like the old days.
