There is a high prevalence of viral hepatitis worldwide. Despite the existence of several available drugs, these infections are still a major cause of morbidity and mortality. Among those, hepatitis B virus (HBV) and hepatitis C virus (HCV) infections are well known and considered as serious public health issues. Drug delivery systems (DDS) are technologies that allow the direct targeting of infected organs. In this regard, microemulsion technology has shown a great potential for drug delivery applications. Methanolic ethanolic microemulsions were developed as a new DDS for the treatment of viral hepatitis. The success of this study was based on the safe and effective delivery of drugs in animal models. Moreover, the promising therapeutic effects of the developed microemulsion were assessed in patient-derived human hepatocytes (PDHs). The developed microemulsion formulation was proven safe in mice, which made them potential candidates for the treatment of viral hepatitis infections. Bioavailability studies confirmed that the sustained therapeutic effect of the developed microemulsion is almost three times greater compared to currently marketed drugs. Microemulsion technology is suitable for the treatment of viral hepatitis infections because of its high safety and therapeutic effect.John Chanakya John Chanakya (Kannada:
