but not so much that the procedure needed to be redone. Every patient had a blood draw and urine in the far end of the room. All but one had a CT scan done. I don't know what number of patients they tested for symptoms of intoxication. I assume they did urine drug screens on all of the patients who were tested for toxins (even the patients who did not present). Some patients had a pulse oximetry reading and a blood pressure reading. Some patients were sent home with prescriptions.
You may wonder why I just described all of the testing procedures in this clinic. The answer is simple: That is what they do. You may also wonder why I said that the opposite procedure is not necessary. The reason for this is that a busy clinic like this is going to do all of the tests that can be done. They have many of their own tests that are being validated. In addition, these tests are very cheap. To have your blood and urine tested for drugs, it's probably
